

G. Thompson
W. E. Craft
Mr. Hinch

Boston, (Mass^{ts}) Feb. 4, 1857.

Dear Mr. Estlin,

Last evening I filled some pages of letters to yourself and Miss Estlin, in reply to your favours - truly such - by Dr. Sargent. They are now packed, with a quantity of Liberty Bells, Bazaar Gazette, & Annual Reports, &c., in a box directed to R. D. Webb, Dublin, and will go on board the good ship "Plymouth Rock" tomorrow. I will anticipate the arrival of those letters by this short note, to thank you & your daughter for your very kind letters by Dr. S. (which were rec^d. Jan. the 3^d), and for the notes of Mrs. Massie, correspondence with Miss Carpenter, & printed sheets, one of which bore testimony to your zeal, undiminished by bodily weakness & disease, in behalf of our Bazaar and the great Cause it aids. I was very sorry to find that your health was still so poor; I trust it is in the way of restoration, ~~both~~ and that your daughter also will find increase of health & strength. I hope to hear from you soon. My letters (in the box) touched upon Dr. Hall's case, upon Geo. Thompson, his health & his labours, upon our late Annual Meeting, and Soiree in honour of the Liberator, and upon the unparalleled baseness of Oroville Davey. I shall not, in this short note, open those matters again, save to say that G. Thompson is better, after a violent attack of cold which brought ^{him} near to a fever, although he still is feeble. He has worked too hard, has exhausted himself, and even now has too much work laid out before him, and I fear will break down under it. I have kept the circular, concerning a testimonial to him in England, quite private, only Mr. Garrison (I believe) having seen it, but the affair has got wind in some other way* - though I have heard but very little said about it. Mr. T. has seemed to thoroughly enjoy his visit here, has been in excellent spirits, & has won many hearts. It cannot be much, pecuniarily, that he will carry away; but still, I hope, something that will be an aid and relief. It has cost him nothing for hotel-living since he arrived here; the houses of Mr. Garrison, Mr. Charles Hovey, and Francis Jackson, having been his Boston homes, and doors gladly open to him in every other place he has been in. - I heard from him, today, that he had spoken 53 times since landing in this country. - *from a paragraph in some English paper.

A noticeable thing about our Annual Meeting, which has not however as yet been suitably noticed, was the entire absence, throughout, of all Reporters. In all former meetings we have had swarms of them, crowding our Secretaries' tables, and sticking by the sessions from the first to the last. Now! an entire change. The cause is not difficult to be divined. Daniel Webster's edict is, No more agitation of the question of Slavery! The discussion of it must be suppressed! The poor tools and hirelings, who manage the Boston press, one and all say and do as the "Grand Mufti" says and does. But like Sydney Smith's Dame Partington and her maids, who tried to mop up the Atlantic, they cut, and are doomed to cut, a very ridiculous figure, and to be scoffed at and despised by the very men who are using them. Their absence of course ~~was~~ no loss to us; they never undertook to report our meetings, only to caricature them, and find ^a vent for their ribald jokes, which made their little, almost illegible, sheets sell more briskly.

Dr. Largent was very well when last I saw him - greatly regretted (as I did) that he could not go to Bristol - & said the friend, whose illness prevented it, was rather better after his voyage, though not permanently so (as Dr. L. supposed).

I am very desirous that you and your daughter should see William and Ellen Craft, who, as you are aware, are now in Scotland. I want all my Bristol friends to see them. I wish every body, that has a soul, to see them; and the sight of them, and the reflection that Slavery has made, and now claims them, as property, and sends its human bloodhounds to drag them into Slavery again, is enough to create a soul under the ribs of death. Our excellent brother Francis Bishop, I am told, had them at his house in Liverpool. I hope Ellen's health will be restored. Th is a very modest, and in all respects lady like, woman.

At first sight, tho' never failing to make a favorable impression, does her ^{imperfect} ~~no~~ justice. Her Character, manners, & mind, all grow upon you, on acquaintance. And her husband is manly, and a truly worthy man. I spoke to them of Bristol and you, and gave them a letter to you.

I was called into our Common Pleas Court, 2 weeks since to give testimony as to whether I knew Wm. & Ellen C., and whether I knew of their purpose as to returning to this country. By advice of Mr. S. E. Sewall, I declined answering at all, on the ground that, under this Fugitive Slave Law, such answers as I might give, would subject me to a criminal prosecution. - A plea Confession, truly! But, then, what that Law makes crime, the Gospel of Christ enjoins as a peremptory duty. - I shall not refuse imprisonment & fine, when they come in regular course under that law; but I do not think myself bound to furnish any Court with evidence against me. And so the Judge decided the case ~~being~~^{was} argued, not in open Court, but in Chambers. - It was a single question in the case of Wm. Craft & Wife, vs. Hughes & another for a conspiracy to kidnap. - We are i.e. our whole community in great anxiety about the steamship "Atlantic", one of Collins's new line, which has been now 40 days ^{from Liverpool to N. York} at sea, and no tidings of her. It is very generally feared we shall never see her. This is dreadful!

With my best regards to your daughter, to Mrs. John Leopold, I am, Faithfully & Respectfully, Yrs. S. May

I sent you an American Almanac, a Unitⁿ. Annual Register, Chas. Sumner's Argument on Exclusive Coloured Schools, W. J. Bowditch's very valuable pamphlet on "Slavery", &c. I sent to Mr. Lalor the 2 latter & also a Report of the Map. a. S. Society, & the Memoir of Thos. Jones, a Slave.

During the summer you will please direct your letters to me (I hope they will be written) at Leicester. I shall probably be here most of the time after the 1st of June until cold weather again. Since the 1st of March, or thereabouts, my health has been far from good; I think I tried my strength injudiciously in November and December last. I spoke ^{lectured} a great deal. It produced a tendency of blood to the head, & very copious bleeding at the nose. I thought but little of that after it was checked; but after a time began to be sensible of an irregular action & circulation of the blood generally; this at length brought on, for about 48 hours, a most severe pain (with some palpitation) in the region of the heart. I was kept in the house about 5 days with this; & have not felt right since, though better since I came to Leicester. I called in a homoeopathic physician, Dr. Geist, - of much reputation in Boston with those who have faith in that treatment, & who has practised in our family & among our connexions with much success. Under his treatment, the pain ceased by degrees; but I had become quite weak & lost flesh under the pain. He told me I must be careful of speaking much, as I might produce some hemorrhage. I have therefore spared myself, and spoken less frequently since that time. You will not approve my judgment in my medical adviser; I do not profess entire confidence in the system of homoeopathy, but I have a profound regard for their idea of leaving every much to Nature the curative process, and also a very great dislike of a course of medicine & the confinement & prostration of strength it brings with it. But I shall be very glad to hear anything you may please to say against my judgment. And I hope you will excuse so much on this point; and yet why I should ask that, I don't know. I am glad & desirous to hear about your health & that of all my Bristol friends; for without health we can accomplish but little; and very much did both my wife and myself regret learning that your daughter's health had been so much impaired this winter. Why should I doubt then that the matter of our health will have an interest with you?

Adel. has written you a brief note, which I send with this. Please thank Miss Carpenter (if they came from her) for the various documents concerning the Ragged School in Bristol.

P.S. My best respects to Mr. Garrison, Mr. Jones, & your neighbours in St. George St. I think of them all, when writing to you, & am ever ready to do so.

As to Mr. Thicks's letter to you, I find I cannot express all I should like without writing a note as long as his own.
When I read his letter first I pronounced it a very weak & lame defence of himself. It is full of special pleading; he may think I did him injustice (& call it "severe censure" to express it to a man I said, which I still say, that he shunned the Antislavery cause when here; & he may allude to visits to Mr. Garrison, Bruffum, to the Bazaar, &c. in proof that I was unjust; but I repeat it is all special pleading. I know that Mr. Garrison felt, he never talked about it much & only (so far as I know) when questioned that Mr. Th. kept at a distance from him. To go to the Bazaar a little, though we were much gratified at seeing him there; pro-slavery people, & even slaveholders, do so there, though not very frequently.
To accept Mr. Bruffum's invitation to pass time with him at Lynn what very many men, of all views, have frequent opportunity to do, for Mr. B. is frank-hearted & liberal to an unusual extent.
But I would not make too much of all this, nor of his avoidance of the Antislavery Office (about which he says nothing). He says "I continue to think that some such means as are employed by the A.S. Association are needed" - why, in Heaven's name, didn't he say that here, in some way & shape that it could reach the public ear, let people, who knew him at all, know where he stood. But, so far as I know, with regard to the great principles, necessities, & trials of our cause he was, to all practical & efficient ends, wholly dumb, whilst here.
We know he would involve himself in unpleasant differences with Mr.
Gannett, Mr. Ellis, & those "excellent men for whom he has the very highest respect & regard?" Unchangeable or otherwise, that is my judgment. I cannot help judging according to the evidence, "I detest as much as ever"; that said in Cork doesn't amount to a great deal, unless the man was equally frank to say it when he had an opportunity to give his testimony the ears of the American people. He has left no mark here of his detestation of His letter is blankly self-contradictory; he approves of the plans of the A.S. Assoc.
& has the highest respect & regard, at the same time, for the excellent men, who believe plans & operations "morally wrong"! What he means by insinuating that the Abolitionists "encourage fraud & violence in order to procure freedom for a more individuals" (what sympathy with these individuals!), I do not know.
If meant for men who are responsible for A.S. operations, it is slanderous.
But I must close, & take another opportunity for commenting on Mr.
Thicks's letter. I never was more completely deceived in any man.
If he had come here without Antislavery opinions carefully matured, and strongly & ably expressed (in England), I should have thought little about it.
But he had won my confidence, & he betrayed it in every particular. With sincere respect Yours, Saml May Jr.

Mr. Thicks's assertion is utterly unfounded - that opponents of the A.S. movement will not go to the Bazaar. Mr. Gannett went, & so did
